Angelo Corte has planned a field trip for a group of his art students to see the Frederick Law Olmsted Exhibit, which is now on display at the National Gallery.

Olmsted has recently been acclaimed for his foresight as an urban planner and is of particular interest to those of us at Gallaudet. Olmsted is responsible for the original layout and design of the campus during the administration of Edward Miner Gallaudet. The design of the National Capitol grounds and New York City's Central Park are among his other works.

The exhibit can be seen at the National Gallery until January 7, 1973.
